9:00 a.m.  “The Lion in the Path”
James Madison Medalist Lecture
Hunter R. Rawlings III ’70, President, Association of American Universities
American research universities are today the best in the world: they are emulated, envied and entertained by other countries eager to catch up with our success in building such strong institutions. For the past few decades they have contributed mightily to American economic development, which is now based heavily upon innovation, much of it generated at research universities. At the same time, our universities have never confronted such strong public criticism for everything from high cost and student debt to curricular sclerosis, administrative bloat and failure to change traditional paradigms in the face of the digital revolution. Why do such seemingly contradictory views coexist?
Richardson Auditorium, Alexander Hall

“Finding Einstein in a Crowd”
Michael Gordin, Rosengarten Professor of Modern and Contemporary History; Director, Fung Global Fellows Program
Albert Einstein is widely recognized as one of the most famous scientists — if not the most famous — the world has seen, and he surely ranks among one of the most renowned residents of Princeton. Part of his fame, due in no small part to his own pronouncements, emphasizes his reputation as a lone, isolated genius. This lecture will survey Einstein's life as a deeply sociable one, highlighting the many instances where this general impression is deeply mistaken, with implications both for understanding Einstein's science, as well as the tumultuous history of the 20th century.
McCosh Hall, Room 10

DEMONSTRATION: “How Chocolate Is Made from Bean to Bar”
Have you ever wondered how chocolate is made? Find out how the beans of the cocoa tree, Theobroma cacao, become a delicious dessert. Members of Princeton’s student-run bean-to-bar chocolate factory will demonstrate all of the steps in the chocolate making process and will answer questions on the history and production of chocolate.
East Pyne Hall, Room 010

WORKSHOP: “Social Media 101: An Introduction to Social Networking”
This workshop is for social networking novices who want to see what it is all about, but don’t know where to begin. Fellow alumni and current students will serve as one-on-one tutors with you at a computer. Learn how to sign on, to demystify privacy settings, to understand the difference between Facebook and LinkedIn – and more.
Friend Center, Room 009
10:15 a.m.  “In the Nation’s Service”
Woodrow Wilson Award Lecture
Sonia Sotomayor ’76, Associate Justice, United States Supreme Court
Justice Sotomayor will discuss Princeton’s informal motto, “In the Nation’s Service,” and how living that motto has guided her life.
Richardson Auditorium, Alexander Hall

“From the Earth to the Moon”
Robert Stengel *65 *68, Professor of Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering; Director, Program in Robotics and Intelligent Systems
Lunacy: madness or fascination with the moon? In 1960, the U.S. and Russia were captivated by the idea of putting a man on the moon, and the space race began. America won the race handily 45 years ago. In recent decades, lunar missions have been carried out by robotic spacecraft. NASA has conducted studies of human spaceflight but has never received adequate funds for a renewed lunar program. Space agencies in China, Russia and other countries and private enterprises are contemplating manned lunar missions. A second space race may be evolving. Whether through NASA or commercial ventures, will (or should) the U.S. enter the race?
McCosh Hall, Room 28

TOUR: “Princeton Neuroscience Institute and Peretsman-Scully Buildings”
Tour the newly built two-building complex that will house the Department of Psychology in Peretsman-Scully Hall and the interdisciplinary Princeton Neuroscience Institute. Explore state-of-the-art research facilities, faculty offices and instructional space. Meet in the main lobby of the new buildings. Use the entrance near Streicker Bridge and Carl Icahn Laboratory.

WORKSHOP: “Navigating the College Admissions Process”
Dean of Admission Janet L. Rapelye and Susan Horner ’86, Chair of the Princeton Schools Committee, will lead a discussion on everything you wanted to know about preparing to apply to college but were afraid to ask. Open to students in 9th through 11th grades and their parents.
East Pyne Hall, Room 010

10:30 a.m.  DEMONSTRATION: The (Oxidized and) Reduced Chemistry Company presents: “Fiery, Energetic, and Colorful Chemistry, Part 3”
Kathryn M. Wagner, Lecture Demonstrator, Department of Chemistry, and students. A program of chemical changes will be presented and (briefly) explained. Some favorite demonstrations of the late Professor Hubert Alyea ’24 will be included. Fun for all ages.
Frick Chemistry Laboratory, Taylor Auditorium
